

WINCHESTER CITY COMMISSION WRAP-UP

Information from the Tuesday, April 1, 4:30 p.m. special and 5:30 p.m. regular meetings

Commission approves changes to ordinance to address blighted, abandoned property

With changes to a pre-existing ordinance, the City of Winchester is prepared to start better enforcing policies around blighted and abandoned properties.

The Winchester Board of Commissioners approved an amendment to the ordinance at the Tuesday, April 1, meeting, which will strengthen the city's ability to enforce the codes.

According to Kentucky Revised Statute, cities are permitted to enact a separate rate of taxation on abandoned and blighted urban properties.

According to the ordinance, which will require a second reading, "the Board of Commissioners finds that abandoned and blighted urban properties require greater code enforcement activities, maintenance and services such as police and fire protection by the city, which results in significant financial costs for the city."

In the ordinance, an abandoned property is one within the city limits that has been vacant and unimproved for at least one year, and which is "dilapidated, unsanitary, unsafe, vermin-infested or otherwise dangerous to the safety of person and is unfit for its intended use."

Other indicators of abandoned property are:

- Accumulation of trash and debris as a result of neglect or lack of maintenance
- At least three years of delinquent property taxes
- Disconnection, destruction or removal of utilities, plumbing, heating or sewerage, which would make the property unfit for its intended use

The ordinance references KRS 99.705 for definitions of blighted property, which is a space or structure that is in a state of significant deterioration, neglect or disrepair, posing a threat to the community's health and safety.

There will be an ad valorem tax of $1.50 on each $100 of value in addition to the normal ad valorem tax. All money collected from the additional taxes will be placed in a fund designated for legal fees, demolition or rehabilitation of the property.

According to the ordinance, each year, the code enforcement officer will determine which properties are abandoned or blighted and provide a list to the property valuation administrator before the date for annual assessment, at which point the property taxes will reflect the additional tax rate. By May 1 of each year, the code enforcement officer will mail a notice to property owners that the property has been indicated as abandoned or blighted.

Public Works gives annual update

Winchester Public Works Director Brian Sewell provided an update for the Winchester Board of Commissioners at the Tuesday, April 1, meeting.

Sewell said some main tasks of the department include storm sewer and street maintenance, vehicle maintenance, painting, sidewalk maintenance, sign maintenance and salting/scraping roadways during winter weather.

Sewell shared that the department has two full-time mechanics that work on the city's fleet of vehicles. In 2024, they did about 300 oil changes and installed more than 50 new tires.

While street sweeping, the department collected 275 tons of trash and debris from the city roadways and the storm sewer system.

With the sidewalk program, the department replaced 350 feet of sidewalk with a goal to replace more in 2025.

The department focuses on painting every other year, with the main focus on yellow curbing. Striping the roadways is contracted out.

Sewell said one of the highlights of 2024 was the completion of the city's salt barn, which had been under construction since late 2023. The department used more than 950 tons of salt this winter and has about 125 tons left. Sewell said without the salt barn, the department would have likely come close to running short on salt this winter.

"Our goals are to provide good service and keep expenses down," Sewell said.
